

EmpowHer.com: Whispers And Screams About Women's Most Intimate Issues

Women's Health Website Launched To Share Insights, Asides And Topical News

It's Just For Women, The Chief Medical Officer Of The Home and Family

PHOENIX, AZ-- Tapping in to the networking strength of women to provide a unique social forum about important intimate women's health issues, a Phoenix company has launched www.EmpowHer.com, a new Internet "ask and share" community run by women for women.

The site's launch represents the new concept in Internet on-line forums where women ask about and share their personal health experiences. Moreover, the site features the world's first online medical encyclopedia on video.

"This is the new home for women who want to share their most intimate health concerns, inspirational stories and tips with other women," said Michelle King Robson, 48, of Phoenix, founder and Chairman of EmpowHer.com.

Robson personally invested her own resources to launch EmpowHer.com after her own health ordeal. "I was told I needed a hysterectomy and did what my doctor said," she recalled. "After that, I fell into an abyss of health problems that I continue to battle. Now I want to share what I learned."

Robson said she's heard from women all over the U.S. about the need for more women's health advocacy. "As women, we tend to not advocate for ourselves and suffer in silence. We are great at advocating for our loved ones as the Chief Medical Officer of the home, but when it comes to our own health, we tend to do what we are told with out doing any research or asking others for help. Our intuition is so strong but we rarely use it for ourselves."
